How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

- For the 12 months ended October 31, 2024, the Fund underperformed its benchmark, the S&P Global Ex-U.S. Dividend Growers Index. This was largely because of differences in the price of securities used by the Fund to calculate its net asset value and the quoted published prices for the same securities. This practice is known as fair-value pricing.
- Global economic growth appeared relatively stable at around 3% during the period, and U.S. recession fears faded. With inflation continuing to moderate across much of the world, major central banks including the European Central Bank, the Bank of England, and the U.S. Federal Reserve began lowering policy rates. Global stocks posted very strong returns.
- In the Fund's benchmark, Europe—which accounts for almost half the index's weighting—contributed most to the index's performance, followed by the Pacific region and North America. By sector, health care, industrials, technology, and financials contributed most to returns.
