What were the Fund costs for the last year?

(based on a hypothetical $10,000 investment)

Share Class Name	Costs of a $10,000 investment	Costs paid as a percentage of a $10,000 investment
FTSE Pacific ETF Shares	$9	0.08%

How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

- For the 12 months ended October 31, 2024, the Fund underperformed its benchmark index, the FTSE Developed Asia Pacific All Cap Index, largely because of differences in the prices of securities used by the Fund to calculate its net asset value and the quoted published prices for the same securities. This practice is known as fair-value pricing.
- Global economic growth appeared relatively stable at around 3% during the period, and U.S. recession fears faded. With inflation continuing to moderate across much of the world, major central banks including the European Central Bank, the Bank of England, and the U.S. Federal Reserve began lowering policy rates. Global stocks posted very strong returns.
- Japanese companies, which accounted for almost 60% of the weighting in the Fund's benchmark, contributed most to returns. Australian stocks returned even more, but made up less than 20% of the index's weighting.
- With the exception of energy, all sectors posted positive returns, with financials and industrials contributing most to benchmark performance, followed by technology and consumer discretionary.
